RECORDS FROM ERECH TIME OF CYRUS AND CAMBYSES

INTRODUCTION

One hundred and ninety-eight tablets of the Yale Babylonian Collection are published in this volume. They are dated in the reign of Cyrus and Cambyses (538-521 B. C.), and their provenance is Erech and its environs. A few are dated at Babylon and Larsa. As a whole they are well preserved and the script is clear and distinct. Some of the documents deal with religious customs but most are legal or commercial in character, covering judgments, bailments, hire of houses and slaves and of sheep and cattle, receipts of various kinds, leases of land, etc. A review of them discloses the continued power and influence of the temple under the rule of Cyrus and Cambyses; and also the extensive pastoral and agricultural occupations of the environs of Erech.

The temple in the Persian period, as in other periods, was the hub of legal and business transactions, having also large business holdings of its own. For example, it owned slaves (Nos. 1, 17, 66, 73, etc.); owned and confiscated houses (Nos. 2, 28); possessed and leased land (Nos. 47, 51); owned cattle and sheep (Nos. 7, 8, 9), etc.

The evidence of extensive pastoral and agricultural occupations in the environs of Erech is found in the fact that nearly twenty-five per cent of the texts in hand deal with cattle, sheep, and goats; and over twenty-five per cent deal with the products of the fields and orchards.

Direct evidence of the influence of the Hammurabi Code is found in No. 7. Here a man named Gimillu was convicted of stealing animals belonging to the Goddess of Erech, and upon conviction was forced to repay thirtyfold; Code of Hammurabi, No. 8, reads, if a man steals "from a god (temple) or a palace, he shall restore thirtyfold." Indirect evidence of the influence of the Code might be inferred from No. 77, where the father of a širqu, if seen in a wine-room, is to have the MUL-LI-E* inflicted upon him; cf. Code No. 110. Still another comparison might be made between Nos. 47 and 51 with Code Nos. 42-44. In these texts the one who leases the land definitely contracts "to do work in it," while the Code pronounces a penalty upon the one who leases land and fails to cultivate it.

A most unusual court trial is recorded in No. 7. It is the trial of Gimillu, son of Innin-šum-ibni, who had charge of the animals belonging to the Goddess of Erech.

* MUL-LI-E, see YBT, III, 151:16 and Nbk. 64 for other occurrences. In the latter reference it is used in a court decision. In our text it is used in connection with the verb malū and a cognate accusative built on this verb is suggested.

The case was one of some importance, for it was conducted before no less than five officials and fifteen jurymen; also four scribes were present. It has some of the earmarks of a modern investigation in that much conflicting testimony was adduced, but at the conclusion stern justice was meted out to the defendant.

This man Gimillu was a rascal. In the second section of the record, lines 30-42, he is convicted of stealing two cows which were marked with a star. They were found in his house. In the third section, lines 43-49, he branded a cow and entrusted it to a man named Ibnâ (which was a lawful proceeding), but later he took the cow from Ibnâ's shepherd, and insinuated at the trial that it was still in Ibnâ's possession. Ibnâ, however, produced witnesses to the fact that Gimillu took the cow from his shepherd, and Gimillu was finally forced to confess it. In the next section, lines 51-59, he is convicted of stealing three animals, one of which was marked with a star. In the following section, lines 60-69, he is convicted of selling three sheep which belonged to the Bêlit of Erech, and of pocketing the money. He accused a man named Nidintum in this transaction, but the document of sale, in which was recorded the fact that Gimillu had received the money, was read in court. And so it goes through one hundred lines of testimony. Not only did he steal animals that belonged to the Goddess of Erech, but in the last section of the record, lines 140-146, he is convicted of stealing one coat of mail for which he was fined ten shekels of silver. In all, he was convicted on twelve counts, and the total of the judgments decreed against this unscrupulous office-holder amounted to ninety-two cows, three hundred and two sheep, one mina, and ten shekels of silver. This trial took place in the first year of the reign of Cyrus.

Nos. 31 and 35 give additional evidence of Gimillu's duplicity. In the former he is again party to a controversy concerning sheep marked with a star. The other party has evidently made the assertion to the temple officials that Gimillu had taken from his flock two sheep belonging to the temple. Gimillu has either failed to report the sheep or has denied the charges. The man making the accusation must come to Babylon on the day the court convenes and bring suit for recovery of the sheep. If he does not come to court and establish his claim, he himself is to be held responsible for the sheep. In No. 35 Gimillu admits his responsibility for one of three missing sheep and is fined accordingly. These texts are dated in the third and fourth years of Cyrus.

No. 102 is doubly interesting in that Ribêtum, a širqu of the Goddess of Erech, who was a farmer, relates how he ran away from his job in the eighth year of Cyrus and was found in the accession year of Cambyses by the same Gimillu, who, as stated above, was a consummate rascal. Once again, in this instance, Gimillu is guilty of double dealing. After contracting to rent Rihêtum to Sin-ibni for five shekels of silver, he made the same bargain with Nabû-nâdin; and all three, including Rihêtum, had to come into court and settle the matter. It is amazing that Gimillu could hold office so long in the face of so much duplicity, for No. 198 shows him again appearing before court in the sixth year of Cambyses.

Nos. 7, 9, 14, 15, 30, 41, 111, 125, 128, 132, 140, 161, and 192 all deal with animals which are ša kak-kab-tum še-en-du, "marked with a star." No. 161 gives a variant reading, MUL-tum še-en-du. The animals thus marked belong in each instance to the Goddess of Erech, for the star is the peculiar brand of Ishtar.

A splendid specimen of the auditing of accounts in the Persian period is seen in No. 8. Shuzubu, whose records were being checked up, was in charge of the animals which were received for temple offerings and sacrifice. The period of business covered the last three years of the reign of Nabonidus. The audit was made in the first month of the first year of Cyrus. During that time this man received no less than seven thousand and thirty-six animals and had disposed of six thousand eight hundred and sixteen, leaving a balance of two hundred and twenty. According to the figures on the tablet, the audit shows that Shuzubu's accounts were correct. A peculiar feature of the tablet is that there are no witnesses to the check and even the auditor did not subscribe his name.

The study of the širqûtu is greatly enriched by this volume which contains more texts dealing with this class of temple slaves than any other hitherto published. Nos. 1, 2, 10, 17, 20, 40, 44, 47, 56, 60, 66, 69, 70, 73, 77, 79, 88, 89, 91, 92, 97, 102, 107, 114, 129, 137, 146, 154, and 158 throw light upon the work they did, the bondage some suffered, and the privileges others enjoyed. Slaves of this class had personal rights that had to be respected and could appear at court against their masters (No. 66); they had no right to enter a wine-room (No. 77); they could be men of executive ability and have authority over other širqe, and could appear before such a high personage as Gobryas, the military governor of Babylon (No. 70); they could be hired out (Nos. 44 and 73); could own property (No. 2); and could obtain a lease of land from the temple (No. 47). Nos. 56 and 92 hint at unlawful relations on the part of some of them with foreigners, one Zababa-êreš, a Kishite, and Šabdia, an Arbite, and mentions the penalty if they are seen together.

An unusually interesting text of this class is No. 66 which narrates the experience of a female slave named Nûbtâ. She claimed in court that she was marked with a star and consecrated to the Goddess of Erech by her master before he died; as evidence, she showed the star which the officials saw on her hand. After her master died, his brother, evidently falling heir to the estate, took her to his home, for the slave testified that he did not give her to the Goddess of Erech, as it might be assumed he was supposed to do. While in this man's house, she asserts, she gave birth to three sons. It is reasonable to infer that these were the offspring of her master or else of a slave to whom her master gave her for the bearing of offspring to increase his slave holdings, and that her appearance in court was the result of ill-treatment. This inference is based upon the official decision in lines 18 and 19, for while she and her sons are again entrusted to her master's keeping (her sons are not referred to again) it is distinctly mentioned that she shall serve her master as long as he lives, and that he must not i-sab-bi (desire her), give her in marriage to a slave, nor sell her for silver.

In No. 106:1 a sign appears which it has not been possible to locate. It is written ŠAR+IGI-GUNU, and is the name of a city, since the determinative dl precedes, and the determinative ki follows it. If the Sin-šar-ušur who is the šatammu of "ŠAR+IGI-GUNU" in this text dated in the first year of Cambyses, is the same Sin-šar-ušur who is the šaqû šarri bél piqitti Eanna in No. 182:12, dated in the fifth year of Cambyses, who followed in this office the well-known šaqû šarri bél piqitti Eanna, Nabû-ah-iddin, it might follow that this city was near Erech, which would make the transfer of an official an easy matter.

A son of Gobryas, the military governor of Babylon, named Nabûgu, appears in Nos. 137, 177, and 192. The name is written Na-bu-ú-gu and Na-bu-gu. In Nos. 137 and 177 he appears as an official with headquarters in Babylon, where certain individuals are to appear before him.

No. 198 contains the seals of officers mentioned often in these texts. Imbia, the ša-ku of Erech; Nabû-mukín-aplu, the šatammu of Eanna; Sin-šar-ušur, the šaqû šarri bél piqitti Eanna, who succeeded Nabû-ah-iddin; and Silim-ilu, who was over the qu-up-pu makkur Eanna. The ša-ku of Erech in No. 7, which records the trial of Gimillu, appears first in a list of five officials; the kípi, šatammu, šaqû šarri bél piqitti Eanna and the dupšarré Eanna following in order. In No. 71, the high priest with four other priests testify before Imbia, the ša-ku of Erech, concerning the non-attendance of the šatammu and the šaqû šarri bél piqitti Eanna at the sacrifice of the LI-LI-SI. It would appear from this that the office of the ša-ku was the highest in the city of Erech. There are four ša-ku officials mentioned in these texts; Nâdinu, in the first year of Cyrus (No. 7); Šulâ, in the second year of Cyrus (No. 23); Nabû-šar-ušur, in the third year of Cyrus (No. 30); and Imbia, in the eighth year of Cyrus and the sixth year of Cambyses (Nos. 71 and 198).

I wish to express to Professor Clay my deep appreciation of the help and inspiration he has given me in the preparation of this volume, without which this work would not have been possible. My thanks are also due to Dr. E. M. Grice, Professor R. P. Dougherty and Dr. C. E. Keiser for valuable aid and suggestions.

20 Yea, I have seen the affliction of my people which they suffered in Egypt, and have heard their groanings: and I know their sorrows; and I have come down to deliver them from the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land, that they may be able to get them a place of their own, and a wide land where they may dwell freely, and without fear of any man: for all men shall be subject unto me.

The image displays four horizontal rows of ancient Chinese characters, specifically from the Shang or Zhou dynasties, arranged vertically. The characters are composed of various strokes including vertical lines, horizontal lines, and diagonal lines forming complex geometric shapes.

- The image displays four rows of cuneiform script. Row 1a consists of approximately 20 signs, mostly vertical strokes with horizontal cross-hatches. Row 1b contains about 25 signs, including some with diagonal strokes and small circles. Row 1c has about 20 signs, featuring more complex patterns like 'X' shapes and multiple horizontal lines. Row 2a.E. at the bottom includes a large sign resembling a 'V' with a crossbar, followed by several smaller signs.

- The image displays five rows of cuneiform script, likely from a tablet or泥版. The script is written in a vertical column, though the individual characters are arranged horizontally. Each row contains approximately 20-25 characters. Row 6 starts with a large character 'K' and includes 'L', 'M', 'N', 'O', 'P', 'Q', 'R', 'S', 'T', 'U', 'V', 'W', 'X', 'Y', 'Z'. Row 7 starts with 'K' and includes 'L', 'M', 'N', 'O', 'P', 'Q', 'R', 'S', 'T', 'U', 'V', 'W', 'X', 'Y', 'Z'. Row 8 starts with 'K' and includes 'L', 'M', 'N', 'O', 'P', 'Q', 'R', 'S', 'T', 'U', 'V', 'W', 'X', 'Y', 'Z'. Row 9 starts with 'K' and includes 'L', 'M', 'N', 'O', 'P', 'Q', 'R', 'S', 'T', 'U', 'V', 'W', 'X', 'Y', 'Z'. Row 10 starts with 'K' and includes 'L', 'M', 'N', 'O', 'P', 'Q', 'R', 'S', 'T', 'U', 'V', 'W', 'X', 'Y', 'Z'. The characters are formed by wedge-shaped strokes on a light background.

The image displays four rows of cuneiform script, each row consisting of several vertical columns of wedge-shaped signs. Row 0. at the top contains approximately 15 columns. Row 1. has about 12 columns. Row 2. has about 10 columns. Row 3. E. at the bottom has about 10 columns. The script is written from left to right within each column, and the columns are separated by small gaps. A horizontal baseline runs across the entire width of the rows.

The image contains 15 numbered diagrams (15 through 29) illustrating different types of ditches and drainage systems. The diagrams are arranged in three columns. The first column (left) shows cross-sections of various ditch profiles. The second column (middle) shows longitudinal profiles of different ditch designs. The third column (right) shows more complex ditch systems, some with multiple parallel ditches or drainage structures. The labels 'U.E.' (Upper Edge), 'Ditchography.', and 'L.E.' (Lower Edge) are placed near specific diagrams to identify them.

This image shows a horizontal strip of woven fabric with a repeating geometric pattern. The pattern consists of small squares and larger diamonds formed by the intersection of two sets of threads. The colors used are black, white, and a light grey or beige.
